Although the gravitational pull of New Jersey's sub-par economic performance in recent years is still evident, the glass now appears to be "half full". The faster pace of the state's job gains in 2017, coupled with continuing improvement in the financial markets, has lead to significant demand growth across all if its real estate sectors.

This presentation will focus on the interplay between New Jersey's economy and real estate markets in 2018 and beyond.
